Kohn Pedersen Fox's 111 Murray Street, the 58-story, 800-foot residential glass tower in the heart of Tribeca, is now fully enclosed. The striking structure, which began construction in August 2016, features a glassy façade, that effortlessly wraps around 111 Murray's 64 floors, eventually meeting in a way that strongly defines 111 Murray's rounded top, ultimately culminating in a graceful, distinctive crown.

Inspired by tailored lines found in contemporary fashion and the glass vases of Venice and Murano, Italy, 111 Murray's rounded design is visually striking from any direction, as well as inside and out. The building, which has redefined the Manhattan skyline, features 157 luxury residences and will open in the first half of 2018.
